Stefani Rose, singer/songwriter and mother of a child with epilepsy, belts out: "I don't want to be the one who finally learns to live only after those I love are gone. I don't want to be the one who finally learns to give after everyone's moved on. ... So, I'm reaching out ... I don't want to live my life the same old way." It's the message on the title track for her first DVD.

I've been privileged to hear Stefani's story. It is her personal story, but in many ways it is a common human story. I admire her courage and determination to set and achieve her goals and, instead of hiding, she is reaching out and setting an example for all of us.

By its nature, the Bus Tour is also about "reaching out" and inspiring everyone to care for their brain, to prevent brain trauma as a cause of epilepsy, and to teach seizure first aid.

See you on the Tour, Stefani.
